The More You Know

February 27 Session - "Why Information Architecture is Vital to Information Governance"

Information is among an organization's most valuable assets, yet with all our technology advancements, we still struggle to find, leverage, and protect it. Simply throwing more tech products at the challenges of productivity, cybersecurity, privacy, and governance will only add to the chaos. AI, auto-classification, and other emerging information tools can indeed be useful—if we build the information architecture (IA) necessary to support effective information management and information governance (IG). This session will discuss IA and how it is the framework that enables better IG.

The web seminar will air live at 2 p.m. Eastern on February 27.

Upon completing this web seminar, you will be able to:

- Describe information architecture (IA) and how it relates to information governance (IG)
- Identify IA work that you may already be doing and build upon that to grow and mature real business solutions
- Explain why IA is vital to IG and why it cannot be replaced by technology
- Discover real-world steps to get started with IA in IG
